Practical Ideas and Strategies

This highly practical seminar is designed to help you significantly increase student motivation and achievement. You will learn powerful ways to help hard-to-reach students understand and develop a positive growth mindset which can, in turn, motivate them to more deeply engage in the learning process, give their best efforts in school and persevere when they meet obstacles in their achievement. Outstanding teacher and presenter, Sandy Stewart will provide a compelling research-based rationale and dozens of specific, practical structures and strategies that have the power to help all students become successful.

By applying these strategies you can improve students' attitudes toward themselves as learners, decrease off-task or disruptive behavior, increase your time to teach, strengthen student engagement, increase learning, and produce higher student achievement.

The focus of this seminar is on specific classroom practices that boost motivation and increase students' ability to persevere, especially the seemingly "unmotivated" or oppositional students. The goal is to increase responsible behavior and motivate greater student effort and produce higher student achievement.

A Message From Seminar Leader, Sandy Stewart

Uniquely Qualified Instructor

SANDY STEWART is an experienced classroom teacher and an outstanding trainer. As a current, full-time classroom teacher with diverse teaching experiences in both urban and suburban settings at a wide range of grade levels, Sandy knows what works and doesn't. Throughout Sandy's career, she has been passionate about researching and incorporating the best strategies for helping each student reach his/her full potential, academically and socially. Sandy is the author of Best Powerful Strategies for Motivating Hard-to-Reach, Uninterested Students (Grades 3-12), the extensive digital resource handbook each participant will receive at the seminar. Participants leave Sandy's seminar inspired, enthused and equipped with a wealth of strategies they'll be able to use immediately upon returning to their classrooms.

Dear Colleague:

My first 15 years of teaching were in an inner city setting where I realized very quickly that motivating students was going to be one of the greatest challenges that I was going to face. That was true then and it still rings true now in my 35th year of teaching. Very early on I began my own journey in not only understanding the complex and fascinating theories and research behind motivation but taking these big ideas and translating them into the practical application in everyday teaching. That was my passion then and it remains my passion to this day. Over time, I also began to understand how these concepts were so closely intertwined with building sincere, genuine relationships with my students, offering engaging instructional approaches and invitations to their learning and creating a healthy physical and emotional classroom environment.

Drawing on my many years of classroom teaching experience, the latest research and insights formed during extensive additional training, I have designed this seminar to provide you with an opportunity to hear about the latest relevant, meaningful research around motivation and how to apply this research to your everyday approach to teaching. I encourage you to join me in the highly interactive and reflective one-day seminar. Our day will be packed with cutting-edge research and realistic ideas and strategies that can be easily implemented into your fast and furious teaching day. I look forward to sharing my enthusiasm, experience and ideas with you so that you, in turn, can create the conditions for your students to become more excited about their learning and succeed.

Sincerely,

Sandy Stewart

P.S. Although the ideas I present are research-based, my goal will be on sharing the practical ways any classroom teacher can increase students' motivation and willingness to give their best efforts both in and out of the classroom.

'Our day will be packed with cutting-edge research and realistic ideas and strategies that can be easily implemented into your fast and furious teaching day.'

What Your Colleagues Say About Sandy Stewart

"Sandy presented one of the most useful seminars I've attended in years! Many useful take-aways to share with my teachers. I'm looking forward to getting back into my classroom and reevaluating my relationships with my students."

Rachel Stevens, Teacher

"Very enjoyable with tons of new materials and activities I can take back to my school. I also appreciated that this applied to not only teachers, but any staff member that connects with students."
